

Emerging Trends in Development Research

Editor : Virendra Pal Singh
Associate Editor : Manju Singh

The "Emerging Trends in Development Research" (ETDR) is a half yearly interdisciplinary research journal brought into being with an aim to provide a forum for disseminating of the findings of on-going researches and exchange of views between different scientific disciplines, policy-makers and planners concerned with various dimensions of the development process.

The Emerging Trends in Development Research welcomes articles of academic interest representing original and analytical work based on review of existing literature and fresh empirical research studies conducted on various dimensions of development with special reference to the problems of the "Third World" countries

Contributors are requested not to submit papers exceeding 10 printed pages (5000 words). If papers are accepted for publication, contributors will be required to send floppy disks (in microsoft word only) containing the full text of the paper including notes, references, tables, charts, and maps, if any. The manuscripts must be in English. The articles are accepted with an understanding that they are not being submitted for publication elsewhere. The contributors are entitled to receive only one copy of the journal free of cost. The editor reserves the right to publish the articles accepted for publication in the ETDR in a separate edited book simultaneously or afterwards.
